

Jewelry has been a significant adornment for Indian women since ages. Its significance in an Indian woman's life can be judged from the number of jewelry gifts she receives on a variety of auspicious occasions in her life and how even the poorest of women possess some kinds of jewelry they can afford. Indian women's decorating themselves with jewelry is not only a customary tradition, but also has a lot of values attached to each and every jewelry piece worn by the women.

Since the inception of civilization, the jewellery is an integral part of Indian society, for Indian women, it holds utmost significance, not only in term of embellishment but also it is considered auspicious. There cannot be a woman in India, who does not treasure herself with any form of jewellery.

Jewellery is considered as a symbol of esteem for Indian women. The attraction for jewellery has been great in India, that it has become a main part of tradition and culture. To accent their feminine beauty, women use Jewellery made mainly from gold, silver, copper and diamonds. Traditionally, jewellery has always been related with wealth, power and prosperity, it is also forms a principal part of devotion among Indian women.

The Indian jewellery varies from religion to religion to enhance the essence of aesthetic. Here one can find highly crafted jewellery for almost all body parts, including neck, ear, nose, arms, ankles, fingers, waist, hair parting, etc.

Most of the Indian regions have a different tradition and culture, which is reflected in the designs. Traditional jewellery from the diverse parts of the country are an integral part of the people of that region. This traditional distinctness has made these jewellerys extremely demanding all over the world. Jewellerys of different Indian regions have helps to enlighten hundreds of people about a specific culture.

